Making Your Decision

Compare item (e) to item (h). If the tax savings in (e) is greater than the Federal Tax Credit in (h), your Dependent Care Assistance Account will save you more money than the Federal Tax Credit. If the Federal Tax Credit in (h) is greater than the Dependent Care Assistance Account tax savings in (e), then you should not enroll in a Dependent Care Assistance Account. Be sure to talk to a tax advisor if you have any questions about your individual situation.

Summary

A Dependent Care Assistance Account is easy to use and can save money starting with your first paycheck. Unlike the child and dependent care tax credit, which is not available until you file your federal return, a Dependent Care Assistance Account reduces your taxable income right away. And, in most cases, the savings from a Dependent Care Assistance Account exceed the savings from the federal tax credit. Please note: tax savings may not be the only factor to consider when making this decision.

Notes:

- 1) You may use a combination of the Assistance Account and tax credit. However, any amount you deposit to the Assistance Account will be deducted from the maximum you are eligible to use in claiming a tax credit.
 - 2) Services must be provided for someone under age 13 or a qualified* dependent (including eldercare).
 - 3) If you take advantage of either the Assistance Account or the tax credit, you must provide the name, address, and taxpayer identification number of your dependent care provider on your reimbursement form and on your annual federal tax return.
 - 4) If you contribute to a Dependent Care Assistance Account, your employer will include your dependent care reduction on your Form W-2 for IRS reporting purposes only. This amount is tax free. You will need to submit IRS Tax Form 2441 (parts I and III) each year if you participate in the Dependent Care Assistance Account.
- Over the age of 12 (either a child or dependent adult) and physically or mentally incapable of self-care.
